

Enrico Bonadio is Professor of Law at City St George's University of London. He teaches, researches, and advises in the field of intellectual property (IP) law. His research agenda is wide-ranging, having recently focused on international trade aspects of IP, the intersection between IP and new technologies (including artificial intelligence) and IP protection of non-conventional forms of creativity. He is the author of numerous publications on several aspects of IP law, including books, academic articles, book chapters and journalistic pieces.

Enrico is Deputy Editor in Chief of the European Journal of Risk Regulation and member of the Editorial Board of the European Intellectual Property Review. He regularly joins teaching and training missions organised by the World Intellectual Property Organization. In 2019 Enrico co-authored a report on standard essential patents commissioned by the European Parliament.

He has been delivering classes and talks in more than 140 universities and research institutions in six continents and his research has been covered by several media outfits including CNN, Wall Street Journal, Financial Times, Washington Post, New York Times, Reuters, South China Morning Post, BBC, The Times, The Guardian, The Independent, Politico and Associated Press.
